Oxford, Mississippi was incorporated in May of 1837, and was built on land that had once belonged to the Chickasaw Indian Nation. The town was established on fifty acres, which had been conveyed to the county by three men, John Chisholm, John J. Craig and John D. Martin. The men had purchased the land from two Chickasaw Indians, HoKa and E Ah Nah Yea.

Lafayette County was one of 13 counties that had been created in February of 1836 by the state legislature. Most of the counties were given Chickasaw names, but Lafayette was named for Marquis de Lafayette, the young French aristocrat who fought alongside the Americans during the Revolutionary War.

The Mississippi Legislature voted in 1841 to make Oxford the home of the state’s first University, the University of Mississippi. Oxford resident, T.D. Isom had recommended naming the city after Oxford, England in hopes that this would one day become a University town.

The University of Mississippi opened its doors in 1848 to 80 students and has since become a landmark of Oxford and one of the nation’s finest public Universities.

The Civil War broke out in 1861. In 1864 Oxford was nearly devastated when Union troops set fire to the town burning the Courthouse, most of the Square and many homes. The war claimed the lives of Oxford residents, as well as University students, such as the University Greys, a group of students decimated at the Battle of Gettysburg.

During the Civil Rights movement, Oxford again found itself in the middle of turmoil. In 1962, James Meredith entered the University of Mississippi as the first African American student.

Since that time, Oxford has thrived. The city is now known as the home of Nobel Prize winning author William Faulkner and has been featured as a literary destination in publications such as Condé Nast Traveler, Southern Living, and Garden and Gun. Many writers have followed in Faulkner’s footsteps, making Oxford their home over the years and adding to Oxford’s reputation as a literary destination. Touted as the “Cultural Mecca of the South,” creativity abounds in Oxford as musicians, artists and writers alike find inspiration in Oxford’s rich history, small town charm and creative community.

IMMERSE YOURSELF IN OXFORD’S HISTORY

Oxford’s rich history has inspired writers like William Faulkner and is immortalized in many of his books. Today, visiting Oxford’s many historical sites is a walk through history.

From the Civil War to the Civil Rights Movement, there are many lessons and stories that lie in Oxford’s history that can be experienced at these attractions.

THE BURNS BELFRY MUSEUM & MULTICULTURAL CENTER >> The Burns Methodist Episcopal Church was organized by freed slaves in 1869 in an area of Oxford once known as “freemen’s town.” The current building was erected in 1910 and played a major role in the lives of many African-Americans in Oxford from 1910-1974, when a new Burns United Methodist Church was built several blocks away. In September of 2002, author John Grisham donated the church building to the Oxford-Lafayette County Heritage Foundation who have rehabilitated the building and placed permanent exhibits focused on African American history from slavery through Civil Rights.

>> 710 JACKSON AVENUE EAST | HOURS: WED – FRI. 12 – 3 P.M.; SUN. 1 – 4 P.M.

CEDAR OAKS >> Built in 1859 by William Turner, Cedar Oaks is a Greek revival structure that has survived a tumultuous past. Molly Turner Orr gathered a fire brigade to save the home in 1864, set aflame by occupying Union troops. Nearly a century later Cedar Oaks was moved 2.2 miles from its original location to survive business development. Presently, the home is maintained by the Oxford-Lafayette Historic Homes, Inc., and is available by reservation for civic clubs, teas, receptions, weddings, and tours.

(LINKS AVAILABLE ON NORTH 16TH STREET; ACROSS FROM ST. PETER’S CEMETERY)

ST PETER’S CEMETERY >> A few blocks northeast of the Square, the old Oxford Cemetery is nestled in the rolling hills of a quiet neighborhood. Saint Peter’s is the final resting place for novelist William Faulkner as well as many of Oxford’s most prominent citizens. L.Q.C. Lamar, a former U.S. Congressman, Secretary of the Interior under President Cleveland, and U.S. Supreme Court Justice, is buried here. Beside the circle of cedars lies a Revolutionary War Veteran, as well as a Confederate General. William Faulkner’s grave lies at the bottom of the hill on North 16th Street.

EXPERIENCE OXFORD’S HISTORIC DOWNTOWN SQUARE

Since Oxford’s incorporation in 1837, the Square has remained the center of culture and the town’s economic hub. The Square is home to a variety of boutiques, bookstores, art galleries and restaurants. Lucky Magazine featured many of the downtown businesses in a 2006 article on small towns with big style. Whether shopping or dining, you will find some of Oxford’s premier attractions on the Oxford Square. The Square is also the epicenter of Oxford’s nightlife.

Blues Trail Marker >> Learn a little about Oxford’s musical heritage by visiting the blues trail marker on the Square. Part of the Mississippi Blues Trail, the marker commemorates many of Oxford’s musicians and the blues heritage that exists in the Mississippi Hills. For more on the Mississippi Blues Trail visit www.msbluestrail.org.

Faulkner Alley >> As a child, William Faulkner (He added the U later) would walk to the Square from his parent’s house at the corner of University Avenue and South Lamar Boulevard. In the middle of the row of businesses on the southwest section of the Oxford Square was a ‘cut through’ alley about ten feet wide. Later, in the 1950s, the police station was located on Faulkner Alley. In the 70’s, it was “Shine” Morgan’s record store. Still later, in the 80’s, the alley was opened again and turned into an easy short cut from the Square to the parking lot on South Lamar.

The Lyric Theatre >> Originally opened in 1914 as an opera house for stage plays and silent movies, the Lyric Theatre was renovated in recent years and is now a premier live music venue and event space in Oxford and the southeast. For a complete schedule of events, visit www.thelyricoxford.com.

Experience Literary Oxford at William Faulkner’s Rowan Oak >> Built in the 1840s, Rowan Oak became the home of William Faulkner in 1930 and remained his home until his death in 1962. Visitors can see the place that brought Faulkner inspiration for his fictional version of Oxford and Lafayette County, called Jefferson and Yoknapatawpha County. The outline of his award-winning novel A Fable is written on the wall of his study.

Named America’s Most Beautiful Campus by Forbes Magazine, walking the University campus can be a treat. The campus is designed for walking and visitors should get a parking pass from the University Welcome Center on University Avenue as you enter Lyceum Circle.

UNIVERSITY MUSEUM >> Located on the main campus of the University of Mississippi, the University Museum is comprised of the Mary Buie Museum (1939), the adjoining Kate Skipwith Teaching Museum (1977), the Seymour Lawrence Gallery of American Art (1998), and the Lib Fortune Gallery (1998). The names associated with the building honor members of the Skipwith Family of Oxford, who built the original museum and provided the site and partial funding for the addition. The museum is home to several impressive, permanent collections including the Robinson collection of Greek and Roman antiquities, the Millington-Barnard Collection of 19th century scientific instruments, the personal collections of Mary Buie & Kate Skipwith, and an extensive collection of the work of Theora Hamblett, a native Oxonian folk artist. Each year the University Museum is host to eight to ten temporary exhibits in conjunction with various university departments and the local community. Traveling exhibitions from other museums are also represented. >> HOURS: Tue–Sat, 10 a.m.–6 p.m. Admission is free to permanent collections and $5 for special exhibitions (discounted fees for seniors & group tours).

THE LYCEUM >> The oldest building on the University of Mississippi campus, this iconic building, completed in 1848, was the only survivor of the five original buildings to the University. Ionic Greek Revival style architecture, the building has become a trademark at the University of MS.

CIVIL RIGHTS MONUMENT/FREEDOM TRAIL MARKER >> The Freedom Trail marker and the Civil Rights monument commemorating the events that took place during the integration of Ole Miss is located behind the Lyceum. This moving statue beautifully honors James Meredith, the first African American student to attend Ole Miss and commemorates the progress the University has made since the tragic and historic events that took place in 1962.

CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF SOUTHERN CULTURE >> Housed in Barnard Observatory on the University of Mississippi campus, The Center for the Study of Southern Culture promotes regional studies and, as the first center of its kind in the nation, serves as a model for future centers in other regions. Its projects include the award-winning Encyclopedia of Southern Culture and publication of Living Blues magazine, the gospel music magazine Rejoice!, and in addition cohosts the annual Faulkner Conference. The observatory displays a changing photographic exhibit throughout the year. A marker on the Mississippi Blues Trail honoring the Living Blues magazine, produced at the University of MS is also located on this site.

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY >> Just to the south of the University’s Tad Smith Coliseum is a modest walled lawn with a single monument at the center. Here lie around 700 Confederate dead from the Battle of Shiloh in 1862. During the Civil War, the buildings of Ole Miss became hospitals for the battle wounded, and the casualties were thus buried here. At one time the cemetery had individual markers but groundskeepers removed them to mow and forgot where they belonged.

GERTRUDE FORD CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS >> Completed in December of 2002, this state of the art facility is a must see for visitors. The 88,000 square foot, multi-event hall serves the University’s performing arts needs and its commitment to cultural enrichment and outreach service. Standing six stories tall, the Ford Center seats 1200 in its regal main hall and additionally offers dance and ballet studios, dressing rooms and green rooms, conference and office space, and a reception hall. The first Presidential debate in 2008 between then Senator Barack Obama and Senator John McCain was held at the Ford Center. For upcoming events, visit www.fordcenter.org.
